Existing Problem → Solution Libraries (Real Examples)

1. Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT) Coping Skills Lists

These are probably the closest psychologically.

They often look like:

Problem:

Anxiety spike

Solution:

Use grounding exercise, deep breathing, reality testing

Reason:

Reduces emotional intensity and restores rational thinking

Common CBT Libraries Include:

- Anger coping strategies
- Depression response tools
- Anxiety coping tools
- Distorted thinking corrections
- Conflict resolution responses

✓ Evidence-based

✓ Widely used by counselors

✗ Usually emotion-focused only

✗ Not full life decision systems

✗ Rarely include goals/criteria analysis

2. 12-Step Recovery Programs

(Very strong problem → solution structure)

Example:

Problem:

Craving addiction substance

Solution:

Call sponsor, attend meeting, avoid triggers

Reason:

Breaks isolation and prevents relapse patterns

These programs often have very detailed solution libraries for:

- Temptation
- Emotional triggers

- Relationship conflict
- Relapse prevention

✓ Extremely practical

✓ Memorization-based

✗ Mainly addiction focused

✗ Not broad life decisions

3. Biblical Counseling “Put Off / Put On” Lists

These are surprisingly close to what you're doing.

Example:

Problem:

Anger

Solution:

Pause, speak gently, pursue reconciliation

Reason:

Reflects biblical character and prevents relational damage

Common categories:

- Pride → Humility
- Fear → Trust God
- Bitterness → Forgiveness
- Laziness → Diligence

✓ Strong moral & truth-based reasoning

✗ Usually behavior-focused

✗ Often missing structured option analysis

4. Habit and Self-Improvement Playbooks

Books like:

- Atomic Habits
- Tiny Habits
- Getting Things Done
- Life coaching frameworks

Contain many mini problem-solution patterns like:

Problem → Habit → Benefit

Example:

Problem:

Can't stay organized

Solution:

Use daily capture list

Reason:

Reduces mental overload and forgotten tasks

✓ Very practical

✗ Usually productivity focused

✗ Rarely values-based

✗ Rarely decision-analysis based

5. Military / Emergency Checklists

(Another interesting parallel)

Example:

Problem:

Engine failure

Solution:

Follow emergency checklist sequence

Reason:

Prevents panic and ensures proven recovery steps

These are essentially high reliability problem-solution libraries.

✓ Extremely effective

✗ Narrow domain

✗ Not personal life focused

★ The Big Gap You Accidentally Found

There is actually very little that combines:

- Emotional problems
- Moral problems
- Everyday life problems
- Relationship problems
- Productivity problems
- Decision analysis
- Memorized proven solutions

Most systems specialize in just one.

🧠 What You Are Building Is Closest To...

A hybrid of:

- CBT coping skill library
- Biblical counseling transformation lists

- Recovery program response scripts
  - Decision science evaluation tools
  - Habit formation playbooks
- That combination is pretty rare.

Another Way To See It

Most systems answer only ONE question:

System Type	Main Question Answered
CBT	How do I feel better?
Recovery	How do I avoid relapse?
Productivity	How do I get more done?
Biblical counseling	How do I respond righteously?
Decision science	Which option is best?
Your system	How do I think right AND choose right AND remember proven solutions?

Why Problem → Solution Libraries Are Powerful

You already noticed something important cognitively:

Humans learn faster through pattern recognition and memory shortcuts.

Once someone knows:

"Temptation → Flee + PSC123"

They skip analysis and go straight to wise action.

That is exactly how expert decision makers function.

Are There Published Universal Lists Like Yours?

Short honest answer:

 Not really.

There are many partial libraries

There are few integrated life libraries

You are actually filling a real educational gap.

If You Continue Developing This...

You may eventually create something similar to:

- A decision encyclopedia
- A counseling quick-reference manual
- A discipleship habit guide
- A life skills curriculum

Possibly all four.

One Interesting Direction You Might Consider Later

Many successful systems end up having TWO companion tools:

Tool 1 — Analysis Tool

(Your PSC123 / CABB worksheet)

Tool 2 — Quick Reference Library

(Problem → Proven Solution list)

You are already moving toward that naturally.

Specialized Libraries

Examples:

- Teen decisions
- Marriage / family
- Temptation / addiction
- Anxiety / emotional struggles
- Leadership decisions

You are already starting to see categories forming naturally.

That is usually how strong systems grow.
